

Ampe – a game of chance

This is an active game, with so much clapping, singing, and jumping involved that it almost looks like a dance. It's a game that's been past down from generation to generation.

Get into groups of 2-4. A leader is chosen and the rest of the group stand in a line facing them.

The leader and another player jump and clap at the same time and place one foot into the middle.

If both players put forward the same foot – the leader wins a point and plays against the next person in line.

If the players put different feet into the middle then the other player becomes the leader and they play against the other children.
